

Grandmother's Bedtime Stories Book 4

Gloria M. Madden

What child doesn't love animals? Gloria Madden continues entertaining children with Grandmother's Bedtime Stories: Book 4. From whales to frogs to raccoons, she covers land and sea, teaching children about the basic fundamentals every child should learn: compassion, respect, and loyalty. Through her characters, Madden proves that sometimes there are unthinkable challenges, but with the help of good friends, there will always be a light at the end of the tunnel.

Madden's short stories are entertaining and delightful. Very young children will delight in the amusing adventures of their favorite animals, and older children will appreciate the friendships that the animals build with each other. The lessons to be learned here are obvious; but Madden presents them with characters that will inspire children to be their best selves. With a little help from a whale, a hippo, a manatee, a frog, a panther, and a raccoon, young readers will find themselves in Rainbow, a magical land that's on the verge of collapse and in desperate need of saving. This story wraps up an unforgettable collection.

I'm HAPPY, Are You?

Henrice Kupper

Most people want to be happy but don't know how to go about making that a possibility. They may seek refuge in hobbies or silence or just hide from the world altogether. Henrice Kupper pulls people out of those dark holes in I'm Happy, Are You? For the person who doesn't want to read a lengthy piece of dry, self-help literature, this book will satisfy the reader's needs. Tight, heavy chapters are the key to grabbing the reader's attention and keeping it.

Happiness is relative. Therapy can be an excellent tool in order to seek that happiness. Kupper practices Rational Emotive Behavior Therapy (REBT) and Mindfulness, which sets her apart from the other happiness gurus out there. Her methods are natural and targeted, allowing her clients the chance to make their own happiness. She did it for herself, and she hopes to help countless others find what she had been looking for all along and achieved through REBT and Mindfulness. Be prepared to be inspired!

Henrice Kupper

If America Star Books is going to be remembered, many years from now, for anything at all, it'll be their decision to introduce thousands of foreign authors to the world market, translated into the one language that connects billions: English.

Henrice Kupper is a prime example and, in fact, a moving testimony to why strangers from afar are no strangers at all. She fell on bad times in her life, lost a child, suffered abuse, things that happen to people worldwide. But Henrice is no whiner. She worked on recovery and became a student, and a teacher, of Rational Emotive Behavior Therapy (REBT). Her book I'm Happy. Are You? reads like a how-to manual, simple, short, straightforward.

There are other books that offer help to those who seek it, in similar circumstances. What makes Henrice's book stand out is the mere fact that she is from an ocean away. She's Dutch, from a small town in Holland where she practices what she preaches, every day. She wrote her book in Dutch. It was published overseas. Not until her translation became available, very recently, could she also reach out to millions who would otherwise have never heard from Henrice and her totally useful suggestions for how to overcome grief and loss and abuse.

It helps when you know someone who has experienced something that you have gone through. But it affirms, approves if you will, when you learn that thousands of miles away, in a different culture, someone lived your life also, and now manages to talk to you about it in your own language. Such is the magic of what Ms Kupper's American publisher is accomplishing.
